Alex Christians works in the Corporate Practice Group at FMJ. He focuses his practice on commercial real estate, and he helps individuals, entrepreneurs, and companies of all sizes to buy, sell, lease, and manage their various real estate interests. Real Estate transactions are often some of the biggest investments that businesses and individuals make. Alex understands this, and he takes the time to learn each client's goals and unique business model. Alex works with clients closely so that he knows where they are coming from and where they want to go. Ultimately, Alex wants to help his clients structure each transaction to meet their unique needs.

Before joining FMJ, Alex developed a wide range of civil practice experience. In his first few years of practice, Alex worked as a plaintiff-side personal injury and product liability attorney, fighting for his clients in the courtroom.

Since then, Alex has worked across the full spectrum of real estate and transactional law, and he has learned to utilize his courtroom advocacy skills in the transactional space when needed. Alex understands the importance of adapting to new circumstances as they arise, and he makes sure his clients receive the best representation for each situation.

PRACTICE PHILOSOPHY

"I view the real estate transaction process as a team effort, and I want to get to know my clients as much as possible. What drives each client, where are they coming from, and where do they want to go? It is important to understand each client's needs so that we can work together toward the best possible outcome."
